The Law of obligations is the branch of law that sets out the general theory of relations between creditors and debtors. The main body of the subject is to be found in Books 5 and 6 of the Civil Code. The main elements of this general theory are as follows: - introductory considerations: notion of obligation, sources, place in the legal system, links with the economic system, evolution; - contractual obligations: notion of contract, formation, effects, regime of non-performance, interpretation, extinction; - unilateral commitment of will; - extra-contractual liability: foundations of civil liability, fault, causality, damage, grounds for exoneration, special regimes, reparation of damage; - other sources of obligation: quasi-contracts, commitments by unilateral declaration of will, appearance; - transmission of obligations, terms of obligations, proof, extinction of obligations.
